

"School of Athens" - The figure of Plato

Post by "Cassius" of May 24, 2021 at 5:45 AM

Quote from Nate

It also reflects the Plato-influence Augustinian and Scholastic schools of theology versus Aristotle-influenced Thomist school

I don't want to suggest we go off-track here, and maybe a separate thread would be better, but in reading this I realize that I don't have even a thumbnail summary in my mind of the practical difference between Augustinian/Scholastic vs Thomist theology. To the extent it would help us contrast these against Epicurean views, I wonder if there is anything brief we can say to set a base for how those two camps differed from each other (as viewed from an Epicurean perspective, not trying to list all possible differences).