

Differences between Epicureanism and Cyrenaicism

The way the quote system works these look like quotes from Kalosyni but of course they are from the article.

Yes, very important to point out. The only way I've found to get around that is to use the html editor and replace the name in the data-author field inside the woltlab element. Needles to say, it's a tad tedious.

The main difference I see between Sedley and DeWitt is that Sedley writes to an academic audience and he doesn't make it his goal to write to average readers and to disabuse them of the ideas presented in the quoted-from article. That's what DeWitt does.

I knew my comment would get a reaction 😊 But seriously, I definitely see your point and the importance of the course of events set in motion by your reading Epicurus and His Philosophy cannot be overstated.

Personally, and this due to the style of delivery, his penchant to sometimes not cite his sources, and his over-the-top Christianity spotting, I much prefer reading DeWitt's academic papers over Epicurus and His Philosophy. Not to mention Epicurus and St. Paul. But I freely admit DeWitt is a top notch scholar (and advocate) of Epicurus and very worth reading.
