

Implementing Personal Hedonic Calculus

I see your post as more Epicurean than Utilitarian. Your post is more concerned with its effect on the individual. My rudimentary understanding of Utilitarianism is that their hedonic calculus actually counts up numbers of dolors and hedons and worries a lot about the "needs of the many." That always seemed too abstract. Yours seems very grounded in the real world.

Plus those beers look intriguing. I'm not sure if that was your own photo, but now I want to hunt them down. 😁
