Quote from Godfrey

Is this a convoluted way of saying that pleasures differ from one another, but that you can't rank them?

That is a very tempting thought Godfrey that deserves some close consideration.

I can't help but think that this question of "ranking pleasures" must have occurred to Epicurus too, and thus would have found its way into the principal Doctrines.

So:

1. Is Godfrey's suggestion correct?
2. What is accomplished by stating this in so convoluted a form? Because I would assert Epicurus must have had a reason for everything he did, especially in writing the Principal Doctrines the way they are.
