Yep, I agree with all of you. Taking your life is a last resort- but it's so liberating of allowing this resort to oneself. If, by whatever means, I see that I'll never again obtain pleasure in my life which would overweight the pain (let's say, I'm deadly ill), then I would gladly take my life with some sort of drug and go out peacefully. By having this thought in the back of my mind, I can allow myself to enjoy my limited time more thoroughly. That doesn't mean that suicide is a solution, and if you consider suicide you should always seek out professional help- but in some situations, that's the best solution, albeit not ideal.
