Quote from Eoghan Gardiner

How many times have we heard of men and women in their 70s beginning to enjoy retirement and then their natural end has come?

I agree with both posts above and when we think about the choice to approach life cheerfully or sadly, we can always remember that death is inevitable, and we don't get an extension of time for the period we spend moping around feeling sad. The end comes too soon whether we've spent our time cheerfully or not, so to the best of our ability we need to spend time as enjoyably as we can.
