But is it The Yardstick? Or only a yardstick?

I think Epicurus would say it (the feelings, pleasure and pain) is the only yardstick given us by nature for what to choose and what to avoid, which would take us back to those earlier issues as to whether human mental attempts to replace them and formulate other yardsticks are corruptions. 😊

And of course my interpretation of Epicurus, and my personal answer to that is "Yes, the suggested replacements are corruptions."
