

Cosma Raimondi's Letter to Ambrogio Tignosi

One question about this letter to further the discussion:

I need to check back, but does Raimondi contradict that Diogenes Laertius and/or Cicero have to say about Epicurus' position as to happiness and the bull of Phalaris?

The word "happiness" and "happiness" is very tricky, and I get the impression that the drift of Raimondi's position is correct, even if Laertius and Cicero seem to say otherwise, given the subtleties of the word.

Probably something worth tracking down over time.
