

Fundamental Issues In Hedonism

Post by “BrainToBeing” of December 10, 2023 at 8:18 AM

When pursuing a search example posed by Cassius I came across this: "Epicurus believed that the ultimate aim of a happy life is 'freedom from pain in the body and from trouble in the mind'". I don't know if this is a quote from this site or from elsewhere.

However, it raises the question: is the "ultimate aim" a happy life or a relevant, contributing life? The former seems so narcissistic.

Thoughts, perspectives? (Or, have you already talked that into the ground?)