

Fundamental Issues In Hedonism

Yes, Don, you are right for sure. Absolute polarization doesn't work.

Mostly I was reflecting on the issue of "a happy life". I believe Epicureanism has been challenged as advocating hedonism. And, the focus of "a happy life" may then leave us wondering if that is the best "yardstick". You all are far more educated on Epicurean philosophy than I am. And, I was wondering if, particularly in this era of the planet, we can really say that searching for "a happy life" is going to save us all from the ecological and technological dilemmas we are creating. Just an opportunity for discussion, if it seems interesting.
