

I'm not going to translate this

Post by "michelepinto" of May 11, 2019 at 5:46 PM

Quote from Cassius

I see! Do you gather that it adds a new "take" on the poem, or largely just another effort over the same ground? I gather that some people (especially those who like poetry) like the idea of tackling it to try to capture the poetic feel. Is that his approach, or is he targeting accuracy of meaning?

I think boot. The focus is the strong of the Words and the feeling he feels and tries to give back. But if the Lucretius words give feelings, they must be about Epicurus teachings.