

Subforum Merger (Consolidation of Ethics Forums, and Encouragement to Post in "The Big Three" When Possible)

Post by "Cassius" of January 23, 2025 at 2:17 PM

I just noticed that we have the following two forums ("Ethics - How To Live as An Epicurean" and "Applications For Day To Day Living") which probably should be consolidated into one, so we'll do that in the very near future. When posting, the General Discussion section is always acceptable for day-to-day general developments, and we can re-file to subforums later if needed. However many of the substantive posts our regulars make will fit into one of the three categories "Physics," "Canonics," or "Ethics." These cover very wide areas, so when you are posting and your topic fits into one of those three, please consider posting in the the "general" section of one of those three topics. Most people coming to the forum should expect to understand that Physics, Ethics, and Canonics are the way things are generally divided, and posting in this way will help those who are first focused on only one of the three to find what they are looking for.

A screenshot of a forum's subforum selection menu. It features two main items, each with a title and a downward-pointing chevron icon on the right. The first item is "Ethics - How To Live As An Epicurean". The second item is "Applications for Everyday Living", which includes a brief description: "For discussion of everyday lifestyle issues from an Epicurean perspective, and living daily life according to Epicurean principles in a very un-Epicurean modern world. (*A Friendly Reminder: As per our forum rules please refrain from contemporary political issues, or similar topics that would be divisive or distracting)." and another chevron icon.

Ethics - How To Live As An Epicurean

Applications for Everyday Living
For discussion of everyday lifestyle issues from an Epicurean perspective, and living daily life according to Epicurean principles in a very un-Epicurean modern world. (*A Friendly Reminder: As per our forum rules please refrain from contemporary political issues, or similar topics that would be divisive or distracting).