OK guys, the graphic is overstated and this is at least partly a joke, so take this in good humor and use it as a spur to form your own opinions:

According to Epicurus, this is a picture of a Golden Toadie of Dionysius, a Profligate who sold drugs, and a hypocritical charlatan - someone consumed with envy.*

*(considering Socrates in his role as dialectician)

Sources: Diogenes Laertius, Colotes, as referenced in Mark Riley's "Epicurean Criticism of Socrates"
