

Lucretius On The Development of Language

Post by "Cassius" of October 25, 2019 at 12:32 PM

Todd I am forgetting - is this tied to an Epicurean context or chapter?

Quote from Todd

Second, an anecdote from Diogenes Laertius, where some philosopher has defined "man" as a featherless biped. Later, someone shows up with a plucked chicken and says, "Behold, a man!" (I'm paraphrasing, but that's the gist of it.)