

Planning And Execution of A Local Group

Post by "Don" of February 25, 2021 at 5:56 PM

Quote from Cassius

Yes Don and while I have the highest respect and gratitude for your translations,

I appreciate that. I'm giving it all she's got, Captain 😊

The word in question is ἀναίσθητος anaisthētos.
<http://www.perseus.tufts.edu/hopper/morph?l...sqhte/w#lexicon>

Look like any English word? It's the basis of "anaesthesia" when we don't feel or sense anything.

I think you're on the right track with the complementary Canon.

Another pertinent fact is the word διαλυθὲν dialythen which has the connotation of being dissolved or broken up into pieces or into elements. So, once death breaks us up into our constituent elements, there's nothing to sense, to feel, to think, to reason... No us. We don't exist.