

"School of Athens" - Diogenes the Cynic(?) and the Gesturers

Post by "Eikadistes" of May 23, 2021 at 10:39 PM

I'd like to propose that these two characters represent the Cynics CRATES OF THEBES,
PHIA OF MARONEIA.

The bald, bearded male in orange standing above them strikes me as being ZENO OF CITIUM, who rose in popularity above his teacher. There is further consistency if we assume the figure in the very back of the row (depicted elsewhere) to be Antisthenes. This entire side represents Cynics and Stoics, if that speculation is accurate.