

Episode Eighty-Two - The Opening Of Book Six - Restatement of the Goal of the Poem

Post by “Martin” of August 6, 2021 at 9:49 AM

When my father crashed his car in a mass pile-up in 1970, it was reconstructed that all involved drivers went too fast for the rainy weather and got fined.

So yes, even if there is no formal speed limit or if drivers stay below an existing speed limit, they can get fined and get judged to have caused an accident because they went too fast for the circumstances.