

Episode One Hundred - Concluding On Justice With A Shout To Keep The Virtues In Their Proper Place

Post by "Cassius" of December 18, 2021 at 5:49 AM

Well this is bizarre (if true).

Near the end of this episode we touch on a passage that follows Diogenes of Oinoanda's "shout" quote, and we discuss (around the 50 minuter mark) whether he is implying whether the classical virtues (including justice) do or do not apply to animals. One possibility is that he is saying that it is naive to suggest that, but another possibility is that he is saying something more generic (that virtue does not exist apart from the living being it benefits) or perhaps even both.

I think that's an interesting question (both on the merits and the details we discussed) but we did not have before us for the discussion the very bizarre report I am going to link below.

I don't know whether this story could possibly be real, or is some kind of sensationalism, but it might be another example where we could bounce off a real world observation to discuss whether justice (and other "virtues") exists in the animal kingdom.

Image not found or type unknown

Enraged monkeys kill 250 DOGS in Indian town

The horrific incidents have been reported in the villages of Majalgaon, where 250 dogs are said to have been killed by rampaging primates, and nearby Lavul.

<https://www.epicureanfriends.com/thread/2274-episode-one-hundred-concluding-on-justice-with-a-shout-to-keep-the-virtues-in-th/?postID=14978#post14978>

