Quote from Cassius

I hope we can one day find more material to allow us to speculate further about his background.

Maybe in the well known Villa of the Papyrus in Herculaneum. According to what I have read, there should be beneath 30 meters of volcanic deposits be the Latin library of 79 AD. Apparently the directors of Pompeii and Herculaneum don't want to excavate more, because of a lack of funds and expertise to correctly treat the excavated treasures (in the case of Herculaneum houses up two to three floors!). We can dream of that. The Greek library, the only library one conserved, as you know, contained about 900 scrolls that with high tech can be read, curiously a lot related with epicurism, which is not less than an incredible miracle, although miracles don't exist 😊 .
