Quote from Cassius

1077] This there is too that in the universe there is nothing single, nothing born unique and growing unique and alone, but it is always of some tribe, and there are many things in the same race. First of all turn your mind to living creatures; you will find that in this wise is begotten the race of wild beasts that haunts the mountains, in this wise the stock of men, in this wise again the dumb herds of scaly fishes, and all the bodies of flying fowls. Wherefore you must confess in the same way that sky and earth and sun, moon, sea, and all else that exists, are not unique, but rather of number numberless; inasmuch as the deep-fixed boundary-stone of life awaits these as surely, and they are just as much of a body that has birth, as every race which is here on earth, abounding in things after its kind.

This only means that there is never just one elephant, one human, one kosmos created in the universe. There is always a herd of elephants, a tribe of humans, an infinity of kosmoi. There is never a single solitary thing by itself. Things or beings are always part of a larger group. You don't have unique one of a kind things popping into existence.
