I think this is the most practical/applied difference between Stoicism and Epicureanism, at least in the modern world.

I am trying for some time now to construct a real life example where a Stoic and an Epicurean will act fundamentally differently based on the Epicureans focus on pleasure instead of the Stoics focus on virtue in and of itself. In all examples I can think of they act the same.

Cassius, reneliza can you construct such a real world example?
