

PD19 And The Meaning Of No "Greater" Pleasure

It could be (and from self-observation of my internal feelings), that dopamine levels are actually highest during the first minute of starting to eat, and especially highest when starting to eat after being very hungry. So the intensity of pleasure is highest at that point, and though it is still pleasurable, it feels less intense after -- so this is why it is a "peak moment of pleasure".

As for PD19: "Finite time and infinite time contain the same amount of joy, if its limits are measured out through reasoning."

You've all done a thorough explanation. But I wonder how to say it in the most simple way --

Joy that lasts a finite time is the same kind of joy that lasts an infinite time. So we don't need to be immortal to experience a complete life.
