

Probably One Of The Worst Ideas/Questions I Have Ever Posed: "Is There Any Community-Building Opportunity in The On-Line Game Zero AD?"

Post by "Onenski" of October 27, 2022 at 11:16 PM

I agree with Joshua on how Minecraft (or any similar virtual space) would be more appropriate, but I'm not sure if it's the most efficient way to spread epicurean philosophy in younger people. I found an article (link below) on how some people do their job meetings in videogames: GTA, Animal Crossing, Minecraft, etc. However, I think it works with people they already know, not for integrate new people. In those cases, they didn't want to have more Zoom meetings. My opinion is that so far our Zoom meetings and the forum itself are good enough for the creation of an epicurean community.

Perhaps tiktoks or (more) videos in YouTube may have more impact in attracting new younger people.

Image not found or type unknown

Executives are getting together in video games, to bond, brainstorm or rampage. \(Published 2020\)

www.nytimes.com

<https://www.epicureanfriends.com/thread/2722-probably-one-of-the-worst-ideas-questions-i-have-ever-posed-is-there-any-communi/?postID=20377#post20377>