There's also The Herculaneum Society, promoting the study of the archeological site and of the papyri. They hold a biannual conference and minor events throughout the year. I tried to attend last year, but the conference had been already sold out.

Offtopic: It seems there is amazing progress in digital unrolling of yet inaccessible papyri. Unfortunately, the data surpasses my browser's capacity, perhaps someone else can check out some of the scans.
