On page 354 is a reference to a painting entitled "Triumph of St Augustine," about which DeWitt says:

A similar motive inspired a painting now in the Palazzo Diamanti in Ferrara, Italy. which is entitled "The Triumph of St. Augustine." To the right of the saint in the upper register appear Aristotle, Plato, Socrates. and Seneca. In the middle register the Virtues are represented as punishing the sinners, among whom appear Epicurus."

Either this one at wikisource is different, or it is only part of what DeWitt describes, so we need to track this down.
