

Article: The Ethical Implications of Epicurus' Theology by Stefano Mecci

Post by "Cassius" of September 27, 2023 at 8:07 AM

I'll have to come back to this but I remember that deWitt has citations against this position, to the effect that there are reliable cites that Epicurus held that the gods must act to maintain their deathlessness:

"On the contrary, divine happiness is immediate, effortless and perennial. The gods must not even «hope» to continue to remain in the state of bliss, as happens to men: they are always in this condition, without any effort."