

Ancient Greek/Roman Customs, Culture, and Clothing

Post by “Joshua” of October 30, 2023 at 7:58 PM

The idealized garb of philosophers among the Greeks was taken from the symbols of Cynicism: a cloak to keep off the elements, a bag or purse to hold all of one's worldly possessions, and a staff for walking. The staff and purse are shown on the Boscoreale treasure's philosophy cup. No cloak was necessary here--all of the figures on the cup are skeletons, underlining the link between philosophy and death.

But Epicurus was not a Cynic. He also didn't hold forth publicly in the regimented world of the gymnasiarchs. Presumably he wore what was handy, some of it purchased and some, perhaps, gifted.

Image not found or type unknown

<https://www.epicureanfriends.com/thread/4297-ancient-greek-roman-customs-culture-and-clothing/?postID=26896#post26896>

Plato's Academy mosaic - Wikipedia

en.m.wikipedia.org

This mosaic from Herculaneum is thought to depict Greek philosophers as Romans would have imagined them.