

Epicurean Perspectives on Cultural Conflict

Post by "Cassius" of March 28, 2019 at 4:59 PM

It's my job to try to keep everyone civil. One possible more neutral way to consider that question might be:

1 - I can't imagine a devoted Epicurean gladly choosing to live in a hyper-supernatural religious society or any kind, unless he/she was truly deprived of better options. In which case, choosing to live in Mecca might be preferable to being dead (maybe / probably / possibly?). Anyone disagree?

2 - If it were possible to have a "secular-islamic" society, along the lines of our modern non-fundamental Sunday-only Christians, would a dedicated Epicurean still have major objections to living within such a society, and if so, why?