

Scientific Support for Psychological Hedonism

Post by "Cassius" of April 23, 2024 at 8:31 AM

Definitely Lucretius says that, and maybe Cicero does too, but I am not quick enough to cite the references on the spot 😊

I know there's discussion in Cicero too about the task of the translator - it may be in the opening section of "On the Nature of the Gods," but I think it's where he discusses his method of compiling the existing texts into his "dialogue" form.

become authors themselves. A great many accomplished students of Greek learning were unable to share their acquisitions with their fellow-citizens, on the ground that they doubted the possibility of conveying in Latin the teachings they had received from the Greeks. In the matter of style however I believe that we have made such progress that even in richness of vocabulary the Greeks do not surpass us. Another thing that urged me to this occupation was