

Looking for a book recommendation

Cleveland good to hear from you!

It's not of the self-help variety, but I don't see "A Few Days In Athens" on your list. It's really pretty brilliant, just don't let the "flowery" nature of the first chapter put you off.

Beyond that, I would recommend LISTENING to the Charlton Griffin version of Lucretius.

Seems like you have covered most of the bases -- but I also don't see the Boeri book on your list - even though it is about "politics" it's really about the extent of engagement that Epicurus really suggested, and it contains a lot of good detail that otherwise doesn't get talked about that much.

But mostly now you've hit the problem that we really need *new* literature that actually follows what the school taught.
