

Festivals in Ancient Greece

Post by “Kalosyni” of September 20, 2024 at 8:21 AM

Just a "fun-fact" ...according to Wikipedia, this time of year (August/September) would be the time in ancient Greece for the Metageitnion Apollo festival.

Quote

Metageitnia (Ancient Greek: Μεταγείτνια, μετά + γειτονία literally change of neighborhood) was an Ancient Greek festival held in Athens during the month Metageitnion (August/September) in the honor of Metageitnion Apollo.<sup>[1][2]</sup> The month of Metageitnion was named after the festival Metageitnia, which celebrated the migration of Theseus from Melite to Diomeia.<sup>[3]</sup> The celebration of the festival itself declined over time and was replaced by the Apaturia.<sup>[4]</sup> The festival evolved into a celebration of migrations, immigrations, departures, and colonizations among the Ionians - Metageitnion Apollo presided over the metoikia (the abode).

The Metageitnia is also mentioned by Plutarch in the treatise On Exile in Moralia.<sup>[5][6]</sup>

Source: Wikipedia

And, in Epicurus' will he requests the remembrance of the day of Polyænus during the month of Metageitnion.

Thread

Polyænus - Main Biography

"There was also Polyænus, son of Athenodorus, of Lampsacus, a modest and friendly man, as Philodemus and his followers say.' [ Diogenes Laertius 24] Polyænus was the son of Athenodorus. His friendship with Epicurus started after the latter's escape from Mytilene in 307 or 306 BC when he opened a philosophical school at Lampsacus associating himself with other citizens of the town, like Pythocles, Colotes, and Idomeneus. With these fellow citizens he moved to Athens, where they founded a...

Cassius

November 20, 2023 at 3:02 PM