

Thought experiment - A vacation without lasting memories

Post by “Don” of October 1, 2024 at 6:17 PM

I would offer a version of the hypothetical.

Riffing on Cassius 's "Epicureans don't live in a cave" and in light of the book I've just started listening to:

What happens to your life if there is no one to remember you? If your memories are solely your own with no one who experienced them with you? Do you need someone to remember you when you die? Do you need someone to mourn you?

I think I know my answer, but I'm going to tag team on this thread with that little question.