

Ben's personal outline of Epicurean philosophy

Post by "Mousikos" of May 17, 2019 at 12:20 PM

Quote from Hiram

I think this is what is called "archetypes of the collective unconscious" in Jungian psychology.

Jung cited the example of newborn tiny birds from Galapagos that exhibited panic when a large plane flew over them ... but there are no birds of prey that eat that species of tiny birds. Which means they must have inherited this panic instinct from ancestors from South America, who WERE eaten by Condors.

Having thought a bit more about this, I think this could be related, yes.

Has anyone else explored connections between Epicurus and Jung?