Don aside from the papyrus we are talking about what citations can you provide for that? Possibly they are in the tread above and if so I will delete this post...

I'm not aware of any other than a possible paraphrase in Cicero and its similarity to the first few PDs.

My contention + and fondness for it as a link to the ancient members of our school and that it is of ancient Epicurean provenance is:

1. If Philodemus created it, he is a pivotal member of the ancient Epicurean school.
2. If Philodemus was critiquing its use among other Epicureans, they were obviously using it.
