

Welcome AxA

I think I'll learn a lot from this first attempt at a live meetup. I'll have to manage the conversation, make sure it's not just generic chat, and prevent anyone (including myself) from talking too much.

Have any of you held in-person gatherings in the past?

I don't have any particular background in philosophy other than a broad general education. I would say my interest is very practical. While discussion of abstract ideas is a pleasure in itself, my main interest is the mechanics of living a good life. Epicurus's perspective has helped me to clarify that I have an excess of anxieties about unnecessary matters, and a deficiency of good friendships.
