What I found especially insightful about this conversation was it made me realize that while I have always accepted the finality of my death, I have a mental timeline that projects from ancient history out into the future, and I imagine myself as part of that timeline. So I judge my life against this expanded sense of time, and see it as very inconvenient to only be alive for a tiny part of it. Without realizing it, I have been applying vain standards on myself. Now that I see this, I can start to imagine what it would be like to be fully comfortable living entirely within my available time window. Still quite an adjustment though!
