

Is the art of fashion worthy of the attention of an epicurean?

Post by “Hiram” of June 7, 2019 at 4:48 PM

Relevant to this:

How virtue morphs into beauty in the eye of the beholder - <https://aeon.co/essays/how-vir...of-the-beholder>

I've heard the observation more than once that when people are mad or angry they look ugly. This is used in children's classes at Buddhist temples to encourage happy interactions. But there are studies that link cheerfulness (and confidence) with being more attractive. So beauty is not entirely about shape and appearance.