Quote from Cassius

But if the "prolepsis" of justice or gods did not exist, we would never begin considering or discussing those concepts in the first place.

Why doesn't this argument apply to things we don't have a prolepsis of, such as atoms? If we don't have a prolepsis of atoms (which I agree we don't), how could we begin considering or discussing the concept? And why doesn't the answer to that question also work for gods or justice?
