Raphael Raul with your visual perspective, I'm wondering what your thoughts are on this subject? Assuming that the Renaissance painter Raphael included Epíkouros in "The School of Athens", which figure would you assume him to be? (You can find more context in previous posts).

History generally recognizes this as being Epíkouros:

Many of us tend to think that's incorrect, given the option of this figure:

Or perhaps the truth is something contrary to either of these positions.

I just wanted your perspective, given your latest artistic contribution.
