Good idea Patrikios we can kick that around. The big barrier to it is that the Athens seminar is conducted in Greek and for Greeks, and I don't think they're entirely ok with the idea of listening in English, just as we aren't able (interested or not) to listen in Greek. That's been the major barrier in the past, other than in the single year that Christos (who is bilingual) coordinated a zoom. I suspect that if Christos had thought that that effort was worth the trouble it cost he probably would have done another one since then, but at some point we can look at that again because I know some of us would like to hear from him more than we do.
