Don Your comment is fair on the weakness of the statement "the goal of life is life while you have it" Perhaps a deeper dive like: The greatest good, is to live out your life as Nature intends. sits a little better? Not that anyone should interpret Epicurus in that fashion, but it does resonate better with me.

Cassius And perhaps clarifying my reference to Brian Greene: it was for his view that he doesn't worry about an afterlife, knowing that he is fulfilling Nature's laws that upon death, he will return to the stuff of the stars, the stuff he is made of while living. Not that he is an Epicurean, but that his sentiment on Nature is Epicurean.
