Pytam tylko dla jasności... czy miałeś na myśli epikurejską fizykę naturalną czy epikurejską etykę opartą na naturze/tym, co jest naturalne?

What I mean is that Stoic physics is based on providence. Essentially, according to the Stoics, the world is harmoniously and rationally ordered. This is something intentional.

Epicureans approach physics from an atomic perspective and do not recognize providence. I think they are closer to what modern science is talking about in this regard. The Epicureans were also the first to discuss natural selection.

Regarding ethics, I have some doubts here, but I'm adopting the Epicurean perspective on this forum. I also know that the Stoic idea fundamental to Stoic ethics (oikeiôsis) is a bit of a stretch.
