OK. I listened and read along for about half of the text intending to do so to the end. Then I couldn't put up with the verbal dialogue's pace and instead skimmed the rest of it by reading mostly Lycinus' commentary. I need some help here. I can't draw a firm conclusion of the value of the dialogue. Please give me a reason why this is helpful to a person, or put another way, what the author intended to say in far fewer words than he used.
