Thank you Cassius and hello everyone!

As stated in my message I am an aspiring young researcher. So far my main field of interest was ancient hedonism - so Aristippus and his school and of course Epicurus later. The main focus of my studies is then epicurean ethics, however I believe that one ought to concern themselves with its atomistic foundation to understand it fully.

Lately I have been spending more time on Lucretius' De rerum natura as apart from the philosophy background I am also educated in literary studies. The poem has been a great interest of mine as a meeting point for both epicurean philosophy and poetry.

The forum will hopefully act as the Garden for me to find a community among other students of Epicurus!
