@Eikadistes Thank you for your work on the Philodemus text! I see over at your link (the Twentiers website), there is this symbol used in the text:

...which is used when parts of the text are missing. Does the source text give any indication of how many words or lines are missing at each of these points?

And in general regarding Philodemus texts, are there differences of whether this is addressed or not, to be found depending on the text or the source?
