Keith tells us:

I am 77 years old and have had a lifelong interest in Philosophy. This has influenced both my beliefs and how I conduct my life.

Initially this resulted in the dismissal of many social and religious conventions but then turned me to embracing the results of my learning.

Epicurean philosophy has until recently played an important but adjuvant role and Epicurious was never the subject of my focused study. Then approximately six months ago a book reading group I belonged to had “Living for Pleasure” by Emily Austin as the subject. I warmed to the content and started to dig deeper into the life and legacy of Epicurious which I have found highly logical and remarkable in its relevance in the age of science.

I then stumbled across the Epicurean Friends website and it appears that you offer a remarkable resource for me to further develop my interest in Epicurean philosophy. I would therefore very much appreciate if you would accept me as a member.

Kind regards,

Keith
