What it doesn't mean (in my view) is that tranquility feels great in the way that caviar or a beautiful view does.

I would slightly disagree, caviar and a beautiful view do feel great in the same way as tranquility, afterall pleasure reach it's limit in removing pain, it's just that tranquility (like all mental feelings) last a lot longer and are more intense because of it being affected by past, present, and future, and thus more important.

Good to hear Austin is working on something!
