

Epicurus' teaching on marriage

Post by "Dubitator314" of August 25, 2019 at 2:07 PM

I'm traveling and don't have sources handy, but I have a quick question involving marriage. I've read that the passage in Diogenes Laertius is mistranslated and should read that the wise man will marry and have children. However, if we accept that, how do we explain the criticism of the schools that preceded Diogenes who criticized the supposed Epicurean teaching that the wise man will not marry and have children (except under special circumstances)?

Thanks.