

My Epicurean plans for 2018

I regret that the "needful employments of life" have again begun to consume what feels like every minute of the day. Even so, trying to retain what I've learned in my own studies and from each of you keeps the prison of public education a little less gloomy. I daresay it's all that keeps me sane sometimes!

It excites me to see the activity and interest in keeping the philosophy alive by expanding to more free platforms. Facebook is especially frustrating, especially when checking my account for the first time after a long day, seeing all the activity I missed and then having it disappear into the data void when I do have the time to catch up.

I'd like to help and support this growth however I can while continuing my still-early studies. I'll spend time catching up on all the new platforms and trying to remain as connected as possible while doing what I can to assist in developing the community. Even if I don't show for a time, know I very sincerely appreciate all of your efforts and discussion, and would very much like to see the community grow!
