... Plus, anyone coordinating a series of meetings on a book club would want some kind of basic lesson plan guide to know what to emphasize anyway.

What say you?

We already have study guides for A Few Days in Athens (in the back of the "Friends of Epicurus" edition of the book and here):

<http://societyofepicurus.com/detailed-revie...-days-in-Athens>

And for "On the Nature of Things" here:

Intro - <http://newepicurean.com/a-new-ebook-an...ture-of-things/>

Summary - <http://newepicurean.com/355/>

Although I don't think there's an alphabetized thematic index, which might help. (by the way there's no search button on New Epicurean)

Might be a good way to help future students (and future teachers of Epicurean philosophy) if we provide our commentary and study guide on other works that we want to direct them to study, like DeWitt's books.
